SEPTEMBER 1994

SUMMARY

by Richard A. Forster, Marjorie W. Rines and Robert H. Stymeist

September was very cloudy and cooler than normal, with frequent rain showers. The temperature averaged 64.2°, just below normal. The high mark was 87° on the 17th, and the low for the month was 50° on September 3. In Boston, rainfall totaled 4.58 inches, 1.52 inches above normal. Measurable amounts fell on 12 days, including eight consecutive days from September 22-29. The heaviest rains fell north of Boston, with some suburbs reporting over double the amounts recorded in Boston. Sunshine was seen only 53 percent of the possible time, a good 10 percent less than the past average. Winds were out of the northwest almost exclusively through midmonth.

LOONS TO WOODPECKERS

September is a month of great diversity among waterbirds and seabirds. As is often the case with these groups of birds, inclement weather tends to force them down to aggregate in numbers or, in the case with seabirds, to bring them close to shore for land-based observation. The only storm of note came on Labor Day weekend, and produced modest results. Early in the morning of September 5, shearwaters and storm-petrels were seen at Race Point, Provincetown, before viewing conditions deteriorated. Elsewhere on September 5, observations came from scattered locations on Cape Cod Bay, but didn't become interesting until early afternoon, when storm-petrels began appearing at First Encounter Beach, Eastham. The flight gained momentum as the afternoon progressed. By late afternoon, the birds appeared tired, some were passing over the beach, and others were flying over the flooded marsh. As observers departed the area individual birds were noted flying inland, and in early evening storm-petrels were located flying and rafted up in Town Cove, Orleans. At dawn the following morning storm-petrels were still present at First Encounter, but many were far offshore at the edge of the tidal flats. However, those that were flying over the flats afforded excellent views of the subtle field identification marks. Red-necked Phalaropes were also well reported during this storm. Jaegers, often a feature of such storms, were present, with Parasitics predominating at Sandy Neck, Barnstable, and Pomarines at First Encounter Beach.

Later in the month an extended period of weather dominated by easterly winds prevailed from the 21st to the 27th with heavy rains on the 23rd. Although this period was generally unproductive, Several shearwaters and a Northern Fulmar were seen in Rockport. Twelve Northern Fulmars at Jeffries Ledge on the 29th may have resulted from this weather pattern.

Pied-billed Grebes continued to be reported in encouraging numbers. The most unusual report among waterfowl was of a presumed migrant Common Merganser at Wachusett Reservoir on the early date of the 10th. Heron numbers decreased progressively through the month. A fair number of American Bitterns were reported. A single Least Bittern, seldom encountered during migration, also was reported. Equal numbers of both Little Blue and Tricolored herons were reported, an indication of the scarcity of Little Blue Herons this year. Most Glossy Ibis had departed before the month began.

Hawkwatchers staffed traditional watch sites in anticipation of the Broad-winged Hawk blitz. This year major movements occurred on the 14th-15th and again on the 18th. Other migrant hawk species were recorded in good numbers on those dates but their migration was more evenly distributed through the month. An early Golden Eagle was reported from Framingham, and an immature Swainson's Hawk spent two days in Provincetown. Merlin seemed to be very widely reported, but Peregrine Falcon numbers seemed to be low with no obvious migrant days. A Clapper Rail was seen in Eastham, the most reliable location in the state for this scarce species. A Common Moorhen in West Roxbury was an unusual location, and an American Coot appeared early at Plum Island on the 22nd.

In general, the shorebird migration was disappointing. Species with notably low numbers were Whimbrel; Hudsonian Godwit; White-rumped, Pectoral and Stilt sandpipers; and Long-billed Dowitcher.

The western contingent of shorebirds also fared poorly. Only a handful of Baird's Sandpipers were found, and Western Sandpipers were in low numbers. Buff-breasted Sandpiper fared better, but most reports were of single individuals. Conversely, Marbled Godwit appeared in good numbers but at only two locations. Two species that are rare but annual, American Avocet and Ruff, were reported from non-traditional shorebird hotspots.

The highlight among gulls and terns was a Franklin's Gull found in Provincetown on the 10th. Nearly half of all fall reports for this species occur in the first two weeks of September. Only two Little Gulls were seen, and two reports of Common Black-headed Gulls represented summering individuals. A few kittiwakes were seen during the early September storm. Caspian Terns were scarce, and a late Arctic Tern was found in Chatham. Numbers of Forster's Terns were way down from last year's exceptional flight. Although fairly numerous early in the month, Black Terns were unreported later.

Both cuckoo species were very scarce in sharp contrast to their widespread appearance during the summer months. The Common Nighthawk migration wound down early in the month. Ruby-throated Hummingbird appeared to be well reported. A Selasphorus hummingbird was carefully observed in Sandwich on the 30th. Only one migrant Red-headed Woodpecker was noted, and a few Yellow-bellied Sapsuckers had appeared by month's end.

FLYCATCHERS THROUGH FINCHES

There was a good flight of Yellow-bellied Flycatchers, with at least 10 individuals reported from a wide area compared to only three individuals last September. A single Western Kingbird was noted from Cape Ann, and Olive-sided Flycatchers were noted from four locations. Reports of Red-breasted Nuthatches were few and far between in sharp contrast to last year's major invasion (see article elsewhere in this issue). Carolina Wren totals were also way down from last fall.

Northern Wheatears, repeating last year's invasion, were found in five locations, including two inland areas of Fitchburg and Milford. Typically wheatears appear for a day and then disappear, but the individuals at Fitchburg and Crane Beach in Ipswich were present for four days.

Weather conditions were optimal for migrating thrushes and warblers on the night of September 4. With winds out of the northeast at 10 mph, a low cloud cover, and light drizzle, 123 Swainson's Thrushes and 27 unidentified warblers were tallied in a one-hour time span in Lincoln. Reports of Philadelphia Vireos were overwhelming, and 30 species of warblers were tallied, including 7 Golden-winged, 2 Worm-eating, 24 Connecticut (compared with 9 last year), and 16 Mourning warblers and 15 Yellow-breasted Chats.

Among the seedeaters, 5 Blue Grosbeaks, 8 Dickcissels, 9 Clay-colored, 4 Lark, and 25 Lincoln's sparrows were tallied, as well as an immature Yellow-headed Blackbird in Bedford. R. H. S.
