

BIRD SIGHTINGS

JULY 1995

SUMMARY

by Richard A. Forster, Marjorie W. Rines, and Robert H. Stymeist

July was hot, dry, and cloudy. The temperature averaged 75.9°, 2.4° above normal. This year tied with 1915 as the seventh warmest July in 125 years. There were 9 days with 90° temperatures or higher, and on July 14, the temperature hit 100° in Boston. The humidity, or dew point, was also high, making this month very uncomfortable. Rainfall totaled 1.06 inches, 0.78 inch below average, for the sixth month in a row with below average rainfall. Thunderstorms were noted on six days, producing some spotty rainfall, however few areas got any significant amounts.

LOONS THROUGH WOODPECKERS

Pelagic birds were quite well represented both in terms of variety and numbers, particularly for species such as Greater and Sooty shearwaters, and Wilson's Storm-Petrel. The best counts were recorded on a seabird survey of Stellwagen Bank. This survey coincided with northeast winds which tends to result in more seabirds on the banks. Early reports of Cory's Shearwater in July are often indicative of greater numbers in late summer and early fall. The presence of 25 Audubon's Shearwaters at an unspecified distance southeast of Nantucket is interesting and suggestive of a regular presence in those waters at this season. Herons were reported from the usual locations in typical numbers. The Little Egret continued at Nantucket. The count of Glossy Ibis coming in to the evening roost at Plum Island may well have represented the highest count for the state. The most interesting among a rather mundane report of ducks was a Ruddy Duck apparently summering in Pembroke. Four reports of Sharp-shinned Hawk in midsummer were interesting, and a Peregrine Falcon in Concord was most likely a local Boston breeder or wandering nonbreeder.

Two reports each for King and Clapper rails are about average for these elusive and poorly known marsh-dwelling birds. Virginia Rail was widely distributed and in surprising numbers at some localities, but Soras were much scarcer. Shorebird migration proceeded on schedule. The only rare species - a Black-necked Stilt and a Ruff - were both at Plum Island and both were carryovers from June. The typical early arriving species had built up in considerable numbers by midmonth, while others, notably Whimbrel and Semipalmated Plover, attained good concentrations at the end of the month. Both Marbled Godwit and Western Sandpiper appeared early at North Monomoy. The later-arriving shorebirds began arriving by the end of the month. Stilt Sandpiper numbers were low at Plum Island, and apparently no appreciable numbers of Hudsonian Godwits had arrived by the end of the month. A single Wilson's Phalarope was a paltry monthly total. Red-necked Phalaropes and both Pomarine and Parasitic jaegers appeared in offshore waters at the end of the month.

Apparently two different Little Gulls were at Newburyport during the month. Two Lesser Black-backed Gulls at North Monomoy were at an unusual date. A flurry of Caspian Terns early in the month included a remarkable two birds at Quabbin Reservoir. The usual few Royal Terns appeared at southeastern coastal areas. One observer reported sighting a Sandwich Tern which is almost annual in occurrence. Black Skimmers were more widely reported than usual. The most unusual bird recorded this month in offshore waters was an adult Atlantic Puffin.

A pair of Monk Parakeets was observed at a nest in Blackstone, most likely birds from the well-established colony in Warwick, Rhode Island. Monk Parakeets build nests for protection as well as for breeding. Hence, because no young have been reported it cannot be concluded that any breeding activity occurred. The Northern Saw-whet Owl in Wellfleet was very likely a breeding bird. Whip-poor-wills were typically sparsely recorded. Sherborn hosted nesting pairs of both Red-bellied and Red-headed woodpeckers.

FLYCATCHERS THROUGH GROSBEAKS

Breeding birds continue to be found in early July, although no noteworthy species, such as last year's last year's Sedge Wren or Henslow's Sparrow, were reported. The Golden-winged Warbler in Groveland bred with a Blue-winged Warbler, and two fledglings were noted. As many as five Louisiana Waterthrushes were encountered this month, compared with just two last July. A few reports of Evening Grosbeaks from central Massachusetts may have indicated possible breeding in our area.
