

BIRD SIGHTINGS

September/October 1999

Jim Berry, Seth Kellogg, Simon A. Perkins, Marjorie W. Rines, and Robert H. Stymeist

The weather highlight, especially for birders, was the anticipation of Hurricane Floyd in mid-September. Although there was so much hype in the media, the storm was downgraded before hitting New England, but nonetheless produced several interesting avian specialties along the coast and even in some inland locations. The strongest gusts were noted in the extreme southeastern areas of the state and the heaviest flooding in the west, where storm totals exceeded nine inches in many western Massachusetts communities. The center of Floyd passed in the very early morning of September 17 heading northeast through central Massachusetts just to the west of Worcester.

On the average September was very warm, cloudy with much more rain than normal, while October brought cool temperatures, some heavy rain, but the usual bright blue weather, with sunshine totaling 64 percent of possible. In September there were no temperature records broken but six days topped 80 in Boston. The mercury averaged 67.1 in Boston, 2.3 above normal and tied with 1945 as the ninth warmest in 129 years. The high reached 87 on September 3. October's temperature averaged 53, 1.8 below normal. No temperature records were broken and just eleven days averaged above normal. The high was 75 in Boston on the 17th and the low was 35 on the 19th and 28th. Frost was recorded much earlier west of Boston.

Rainfall totaled 9.86 inches in September, 6.80 inches more than normal in Boston, much of that from the remnants of Hurricane Floyd and another storm on the 10th. The Hurricane dumped much more rain in western Massachusetts. The month was the third wettest September in 129 years of record for Boston, and the wettest since 10.94 inches in 1933. In October rain totaled 4.30 inches in Boston, an inch more than normal.

LOONS THROUGH ALCIDS

It was a season of continued drought, which resulted in some westward shifting of stopover locations for southbound migrants. Some inland records were set, especially in western Massachusetts. Tropical storm Floyd, which tracked through Worcester County, added to the deposition of littoral species inland. In this our first statewide report of the fall migration, we are able to provide a broader perspective on bird movements among such families as waterfowl, raptors, and shorebirds that was lacking until now in these pages. Readers in eastern New England are encouraged to study the reports from the western half of Massachusetts and become familiar with the place names frequently used.

A Pacific Loon at Rockport was one of an increasing number of substantiated reports in recent years, and on the early side. The loyal, if lost, Eared Grebe returned to Niles Beach in East Gloucester for the fifth consecutive year. At least it is lost consistently. Warmer-than-usual ocean temperatures brought impressive numbers of Cory's Shearwaters to Massachusetts waters, or kept them there from the summer; they continued to be seen even from Cape Ann into late September. The numbers of Greater Shearwaters often reached quadruple digits from Cape Ann to Provincetown. Tropical storm Floyd in mid-September brought welcome sightings of Leach's Storm-Petrels to near-shore waters, but the sighting of one from Gloucester September 30 was fortuitous.

Heron reports dotted central and western Massachusetts this fall, as birds took advantage of the more concentrated food supplies in shrinking inland water bodies; a Snowy Egret in Longmeadow was the first September report since 1992 for western Massachusetts. Eight American Bitterns on Plum Island October 17 were an encouraging count. Cattle egrets, in contrast, were few in number and limited to Essex County. This species has been declining in New England throughout the 1990s. Glossy Ibis reports were almost nonexistent.

Greater White-fronted Goose reports from Plum Island and West Newbury were almost certainly of the same bird, and were the only reports. For the second consecutive October, most of the big Snow Goose flights were observed at or near the coast, which is the reverse of the usual trend; see last year's September/October summary for a discussion of this phenomenon. Strangely, Brant showed the opposite trend, with Granville hawk-watchers finding flocks of 90, 80, and 65 migrating overhead on three dates between October 12 and 24. Large flocks inland have rarely been reported, and not since the early 1970s had flocks of that size been observed in fall in western Massachusetts. However, 1999 was the first year with continuous full-time hawk-watch coverage at Granville, so it is possible that the phenomenon is not as rare as we think. "Richardson's" (hutchinsii) Canada Geese are rarely reported from New England, so a report of three at Great Meadows NWR was remarkable.

Whooper Swans maintain their exotic toehold in Essex County and nearby Rockingham County, New Hampshire; birders should remember that these birds are of captive origin and are not an established wild population. One pair of these escaped swans nested successfully in Ipswich in 1996, 1997, and 1998, which explains why as many as a dozen have been found on occasion, but the pair was captured and neutered in 1999 by MDFW to mitigate the spread of this artificially introduced species. Meanwhile, two of the original male birds continue to "waste their genes" by remaining with their adopted Mute Swan families in Ipswich, while another in Newmarket, New Hampshire, on Great Bay, has similarly adopted a human family, attacking all other humans with the nerve to invade his "family's" territory — including the birder who rents an apartment there!

The single Eurasian Wigeon report came from West Barnstable, while Worcester County's perennial drake Tufted Duck returned to Sterling for the fifth straight year. Two Redheads seemingly overcame the species' dislike of Essex County and settled into Cherry Hill Reservoir in West Newbury for at least 11 days, while three more were early in Richmond. Berkshire County had the most Lesser Scaup in October since 1989. But one of the big stories on ducks was the number of drought-related inland records for some species. Note especially the numbers of Green-winged Teal at Great Meadows NWR and Longmeadow; 100 at the latter location constituted the largest flock in the area since 1988. Black Scoters from Quabbin west, particularly the 200 on Onota Lake in Pittsfield, were actually fewer than normal, but eastern readers should be aware that scoters, especially Black Scoters, often put down on inland lakes in migration, and that Onota Lake is one of the best spots for sea ducks anywhere in inland New England. (See "Waterfowl in the Berkshires," by Bartlett Hendricks, Bird Observer, Vol. 20 No. 5, Oct. 1992.) Surf Scoters, on the other hand, were unobserved in western Massachusetts in October for the first time since 1982.

A Common Goldeneye at Wachusett Reservoir on September 17 and a Common Merganser at Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary September 19 were early, while several of the latter species in Holyoke and South Hadley the first week of September may have been residents. The other big duck story is the explosion of fall Ruddy Ducks in recent years, which continued unabated this year. The numbers just keep increasing, so the species is either doing exceptionally well or changing its migratory pathways.

The year 1999 was the first for continuous hawk-watch coverage at Blueberry Hill in Granville and the first for consolidated records in Bird Observer, so attention is drawn to the numbers from that site as well as from the more eastern ones. Perhaps as a consequence of the greater coverage, the seasonal total of Ospreys there was higher than ever before in western Massachusetts, as were the totals for Cooper's Hawk, American Kestrel, and Merlin. The 632 kestrels were the most ever in inland New England. The totals from the same location for Sharp-shinned Hawk and Northern Goshawk were on the high side; those for Red-shouldered and Red-tailed Hawks were average; and that for Broad-winged Hawk was low, as were their numbers at the two primary Worcester County sites, Mounts Wachusett and Watatic. Five Golden Eagles statewide were more than average. On the spectacular side were a light-morph Swainson's Hawk at Mt. Watatic and a dark-morph Red-tailed Hawk in Northampton, a very rare form in New England. Peregrine Falcon reports actually outnumbered those for Merlin statewide, reflecting the national trend that contributed to their federal de-listing in 1999. (They remain on the endangered list in Massachusetts.)

A Ruffed Grouse drumming in Sharon on October 6 showed that testosterone can flow at any time of year. Eleven Wild Turkeys on the Vineyard were evidence that their recent reintroduction there is succeeding, even if the birds tend to attack cars, people, buildings, and so forth. Two Northern Bobwhites at Daniel Webster may have reflected the established, if declining, population in southeastern Massachusetts, but one in Newton was more likely released, as are almost any found west and north of Boston. Late finds were a Clapper Rail on Plum Island October 17 and a Common Moorhen in South Egremont the same day. South Egremont is one of the very few known inland breeding locations in Massachusetts over the last decade for this locally declining species.

Faced with the summer drought, shorebirds migrating inland were forced to concentrate at the last water bodies to dry up. One of these locations, Great Meadows NWR in Concord, attracted some birds not often reported from there, such as Hudsonian Godwits, White-rumped and Baird's Sandpipers, Dunlin, and a Red Phalarope. The latter is the least frequently seen inland of the three phalarope species, but this bird represented at least the fifth record for the locale. Some of these birds coincided with tropical storm Floyd, others not. A Whimbrel at Granville was only the 16th record ever for western Massachusetts; a Stilt Sandpiper in Hadley only the 12th; a Dunlin in Northampton only the 2nd since 1994. Western Sandpipers made a good showing in many coastal locations, but the star of the show was an adult Red-necked Stint at South Beach, Chatham, September 5-13, remarkable for being the third to be documented in the state within a year! A Least Sandpiper October 28 in New Salem was the second-latest on record for western Massachusetts, while two Purple Sandpipers on Nantucket October 1 must have been in a hurry to get to a warmer place than wherever they came from. A juvenile Ruff, an age seldom found in New England, was well-documented at Fort Hill, Eastham September 12.

A skua species was a rare treat from land at Rockport September 6, as was an adult Long-tailed Jaeger from Provincetown, found ten days later by the same observer. Notable gulls were a Little on Plum Island, 7 or 8 Black-headed up and down the coast, a phenomenal total of 1870 Bonaparte's at Lynn, up to nine Lesser Black-backs (typically only one north of Boston), and six Sabine's, with three on one trip (!) to Stellwagen September 14 and two others seen from land on Cape Cod. Tropical storm Floyd brought a Laughing Gull and a Forster's Tern to Wachusett Reservoir and some fancy terns to southeastern Massachusetts: a dozen Royals, mostly in Edgartown on the Vineyard; at least ten Sandwich, also in Edgartown; three Bridleds in Edgartown and Eastham; and as many as six Sootys on Cape Cod. Caspian Terns were found in excellent numbers through the first week of October, including two at Great Meadows NWR. Interestingly, six Sandwich Terns were found on the Vineyard and in Dartmouth prior to tropical storm Floyd. Fifty-three Forster's Terns in Newburyport Harbor were probably a record number for the location, while a Black Tern at Turners Falls was only the 5th western Massachusetts record since 1985, in contrast with 155 of them at Chatham at the time of tropical storm Floyd.

One of the most phenomenal events of the period was the documented discovery of eleven Black-legged Kittiwakes inland at Arlington Reservoir in Arlington on October 30 following a night of heavy fog. Alcids trickling down from their northern haunts in October included an Atlantic Puffin seen from Rockport October 4. Recent sightings of this species in late summer and fall may be related to puffin reintroduction programs in the Gulf of Maine. J.B.

DOVES THROUGH FINCHES

Fall migration can be one of the most exciting times for birders, more interesting and certainly longer than spring migration. Unexpected encounters with vagrants are part of the thrill of any fall outing. Sightings from September through October were no exception. Some of the big fallouts were on days following west or northwesterly winds. At Gay Head on Martha's Vineyard and on nearby Cuttyhunk Island birders witnessed a tremendous fallout of birds on September 12. Along the cliffs at Gay Head over 500 warblers went streaming by unidentified, but there were also flocks of Cedar Waxwings totaling about 2000 birds, 25 Red-breasted Nuthatches and about 800 Bobolinks. Additional highlights from September 12 included 14 House Wrens in Lexington and 20 migrating Veeries in Hanson. Other days in September with west winds were the 18th, 25th, and 30th. On the 26th there was a significant movement of Blue Jays with a count of over 1200 made from Gardner. Northwesterly winds were reported on September 17, 22 and 23rd. In October there were few days with a west or northwest flow; in fact the wind was from a southerly direction on 17 days, leading to instances of reverse migration.

The southerly airflow certainly had something to do with the unprecedented reoccurrence of Chimney Swifts and the large numbers of swallows that were reported during October, especially from Great Meadows NWR in Concord. Most of the swallows, with the exception of Tree Swallows, have left our area in early September. Chimney Swifts, which pretty much follow the same behavior as Common Nighthawks in the fall, are much reduced in numbers by mid-September. On September 20th over 2000 swifts were milling over the impoundments at Great Meadows. Large numbers continued there through mid-October when they were joined by a flock of as many as 70 Northern Rough-winged Swallows. This far and away eclipses any previous record of this species; the Rough-winged Swallow generally leaves our area after breeding, which can be as early as late July. Observers in Worcester reported a sizable movement of landbirds at dawn on October 10, a day of southwest winds, though a day with nearly five inches of rain as well. To quote the observers: "We arrived at Airport Hill in Worcester at 7 a.m. and scanned the skies, the air was filled with pockets of flying landbirds at about eye level. At 7:50 a.m. the movements decreased dramatically and many flocks could be seen descending into the trees. This coincided with the rapid approach of the rain. We left by 8:30 a.m. with 99 percent of the birds unidentified because they were just too distant. The birds we counted flew right over us and gave distinct call notes; in fact, in the case of the Purple Finches, we were able to spash several groups literally out of the sky." The count of 213 Purple Finches was the largest number seen at one time in over a decade by that observer, and it represents one of the all-time high counts for the state. Also tallied was a flock of 39 Pine Siskins.

One of the latest species to breed in Massachusetts is the American Goldfinch and it is not uncommon to see begging young in early September; however the report of adult Red-bellied Woodpeckers feeding young at a nest hole in the Middlesex Fells on September 5 was fairly astonishing. The first confirmed nest of Red-bellied Woodpecker in Massachusetts was in 1977. Since then their range has expanded into our area, and nesting birds are frequently reported. The Middlesex Fells birds are unusual in that they have been observed raising two broods for nearly ten years (this species does not generally raise two broods at the northern end of its range). This, however, seems very late and more likely was due to a failure of the second brood and an attempt to correct that situation. On the subject of range expansion, Carolina Wrens are doing well and are being reported in greater numbers in areas where they had been marginally reported; a bird in New Salem is a good example. Common Ravens are also on the increase in the western part of the state with 20 noted from Granville and 13 from Becket, but more interesting are increased sightings in the eastern portion of the state: 2 from Groton, single birds in Wrentham and Boxford, and another Raven seen off and on from Halibut Point in Rockport.

Birders generally were not disappointed with the fall migration of passersines. Counting the hybrid "Lawrence's" Warbler, a total of 34 species was noted during the period. Some of the more unusual included 3 Golden-winged, 19 Orange-crowned, 2 Yellow-throated, 4 Prothonotary, single Worm-eating and Kentucky, 24 Connecticut, and 5 Hooded warblers, and 14 Yellow-breasted Chats. Observers in western Massachusetts noticed a decline in the overall numbers of Tennessee Warblers, showing a record low. Also in the west, Cape May Warblers have been extremely scarce since 1993, Bay-breasted have been dwindling with just one location reporting, and Blackpolls showed a sudden decline with only 11 birds noted (down considerably from the recent average of about 100). Only one Wilson's was noted, the lowest ever (the usual average is 13), and a Yellow-breasted Chat was the first September report since 1985 and just the 12th overall. Six White-eyed Vireos were still singing in Westport in early September, while three Yellow-throated Vireos were singing at Crooked Pond in Boxford on September 12. Sightings from September 19, following a west wind, at Barre Falls Dam indicated a good flight (with some late breeders): 22 Blue-headed Vireos, 14 Red-eyed Vireos, 17 Hermit Thrushes, and 53 Eastern Phoebe. There was a good, though not remarkable, flight of Red-breasted Nuthatches along the coast from mid-September. At Plum Island over 85 Gray Catbirds and 20 Brown Thrashers were still being seen on September 11. The summary below includes additional species which were reported in better than normal numbers, i.e. Yellow-billed Cuckoo, Yellow-bellied Sapsucker, Northern Shrike, Eastern Bluebirds (really encouraging), 42 Philadelphia Vireos, Dickcissel, Clay-colored, Vesper, Nelson's Sharp-tailed and Fox sparrows.

Vagrants, those birds that missed the turn or were blown off course, are more often found in the fall, and this year was no exception. I'm not sure we can call the Rufous Hummingbird a true vagrant, since she has returned to the same feeder in Agawam for the past three years. Other interesting sightings included a Brewer's Blackbird from Orange, three different Le Conte's Sparrows, and a very cooperative Lark Bunting from North Weymouth. Not really vagrants but really good reports include an Olive-sided Flycatcher in Washington (the only report), 3 Western Kingbirds, a Boreal Chickadee banded at Manomet on October 29, a Lark Sparrow in Lexington, a Henslow's Sparrow from Newbury, and four different Yellow-headed Blackbirds.

What kind of a winter will it be? You can look in the Old Farmer's Almanac, but if birds could tell us I think we would be better off. There has been a fantastic fallout of Saw-whet Owls, good numbers of Barred and more Short-eareds than in recent years; and Snowy Owls have been welcomed after last year's miserable "no-show". There was a good cone crop which in turn made for an abundance of Gray Squirrels, hence a lot of Barred Owls (?); several observers reported Barred Owls dining on Sciurus carolinensis. There were reports of a bad year in the north for small rodents, certainly a cause for the many reports of Saw-whets. Another winter sign is the flight of winter finches; outside of the earlier report of 213 Purple Finches, small numbers of Pine and Evening grosbeaks were noted, and there were widespread reports of both Pine Siskins and Common Redpolls, especially in October.

HOW TO CONTRIBUTE BIRD SIGHTINGS TO BIRD OBSERVER

This publication prints monthly compilations of reports of birds seen in Massachusetts and offshore waters. Space does not permit the inclusion of all material submitted. However, bird sightings sent to Bird Observer are archived at the Massachusetts Audubon Society. Our compilers select and summarize for publication sightings that provide a snapshot of birdlife during the reporting period. These sightings include early and late dates for migratory species, maximum counts of migrants and some common birds, and species found beyond their normal ranges.

Sightings for any given month must be reported in writing by the eighth of the following month. Send to Bird Sightings, Robert H. Styneist, 94 Grove Street, Watertown, MA 02172. Please organize reports by month and by species in current A.O.U. checklist order. Include name and phone number of observer, common name of species, date of sighting, location, number of birds, number of observers, and information relevant to age, sex, morph, etc.

Species on the Review List of the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee, as well as species unusual as to place, time, or known nesting status in Massachusetts should be reported promptly to the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee, c/o Wayne Petersen, Massachusetts Audubon Society, South Great Road, Lincoln, MA 01773.

* Indicates a species on the review list of the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee (MARC). Because these sightings are generally published before the MARC votes, they normally have not been approved by the MARC. The editors publish records that are supported by details, multiple observers, or both.
