

BIRD SIGHTINGS

NOVEMBER/DECEMBER 2000

Richard S. Heil, Seth Kellogg, Marjorie Rines, Robert H. Stymeist

Both November and December were cold; they were, in fact, the 8th and 9th months in a row with below normal temperatures. December, for example was 8.1 degrees below December of 1999 for Boston. An astonishing variety of warblers and other songbirds lingered well into December last year; not the case this year. The average temperature was 43.8 degrees in Boston for November, 1.5 degrees below the average, and in December the average in Boston was 29.2 degrees or 4.4 degrees below normal. The high reached 66 degrees for Boston on November 4 and the low was 17 degrees on the 24th. Rainfall was 4.50 inches in November, just a little higher than the average. There was only a trace of snowfall in Boston, although many western Massachusetts areas received more at month's end. In December the high was 64 degrees on the 17th, which was very misleading: the wind reached a peak gust of 55 mph complete with unseasonable thunderstorms and rain that came at a slant! Many Christmas Bird Counters will not soon forget the weather that Sunday. Rainfall totaled 4.75 inches in Boston with nearly 3 inches on the 17th; snowfall totaled 3.6 inches in Boston, 3.9 inches under the average. A storm on December 30-31 brought mostly rain along the coast but a great deal of snow to most of the state. This was the coldest December since 1989, and most weekends and days of scheduled Christmas Bird Counts had below ideal weather conditions.

LOONS THROUGH ALCIDS

November, as usual, ushered in large numbers of migrating Red-throated Loons along the coast. The only Pacific Loon was a well-described juvenile present at Scusset Beach in Plymouth on November 22. Now with five records accepted by the MARC in just the last four years, plus an additional thirteen unreviewed sight records during the same period, this species has amply demonstrated its status as a rare but quite regular migrant and winterer in our region. Given that this was the coldest December in more than a decade, particularly the first half of the month, a Pied-billed Grebe in the southern Connecticut River Valley, at Agawam, December 16, was indeed tardy. It was perhaps not surprising then that Pied-bills totaled just 41 birds on the Cape Cod Lake and Pond Waterfowl Survey, the lowest in the survey's eighteen years, but only one less than the previous low in, you guessed it, 1989. The continued importance of Buzzard's Bay to Horned Grebes was exemplified by the count of more than 1000 from Bourne on November 9. The Eared Grebe, now in its sixth consecutive season, continued at East Gloucester from October.

Small numbers of Greater Shearwaters persisted well into December, as they did last year, including 25 far offshore at Georges Bank on the 2nd, and nine from shore at Andrew's Point in Rockport during a period of strong SSW winds on the 12th. Other tubenoses were unremarkable with just singles of Cory's and Manx shearwaters reported from Cape Cod in mid-November. The peak of the Northern Gannet migration along the Massachusetts coast typically occurs during November. This season's high count was an impressive 5000-plus in the Chatham area on November 12.

Separate reports of Black Vulture from Bourne and Pocasset in late November probably represented a single bird, while the number of Turkey Vultures in the Westport-Dartmouth area in late November, with a maximum of 75 on November 19, was comparable to that of recent years.

Single Greater White-fronted Geese of undetermined or undescribed race were noted from Fairhaven, November 4, and North Brookfield, November 5. A hardy and intrepid flock of Snow Geese, including one first-winter blue morph, settled in for the long winter at Newburyport Harbor where 114 on December 5 dwindled to 68 by the 26th. It is very unusual, perhaps unprecedented for a flock of this size to be present in December and to attempt to winter in Massachusetts. An adult "Black" Brant, B. b. nigricans, treated by some as a full species, was well photographed (see p. 124) and an exceptional find at Plymouth, November 4, but apparently did not linger. Veit and Petersen, in the Birds of Massachusetts, cite only nine records for the state up to 1993. American Wigeon were still much in evidence, at least into early December on Cape Cod where the waterfowl survey located 184 birds, nearly double the previous seventeen-year average. A total of eleven Eurasian Wigeon for the period was more than usual and included four at Chatham and a single drake, notable in Worcester County, at Southboro.

Two excellent November counts of staging migrant Ring-necked Ducks included 1180 at Southboro on the 4th, and 1000 in the Berkshires at Pittsfield on the 5th. The returning male Tufted Duck, first reported in October, continued at the usual Sterling locations throughout November and later made a brief appearance at Wachusett Reservoir on December 16. Following the remarkable concentration of some 50,000 Surf Scoters in the waters off Martha's Vineyard in late October, no extraordinary counts of scoters were made during the current period. Inland, fourteen Surfs appeared at four sites from Waltham to Turners Falls, and 62 Blacks were located at six sites from Worcester County to the Berkshires. The twice-daily flight of Long-tailed Ducks past the west end of Nantucket was estimated to comprise 185,000 birds on November 23. Although the precise numbers involved in this flight vary from year to year, and even from day to day, this parade to and from foraging areas on Nantucket Shoals remains one of Massachusetts's most enduring and reliable avian spectacles.

Hooded Merganser numbers remain strong following their pronounced increase in the state over the past two decades. On the Cape Cod waterfowl survey the 993 tallied was only slightly below last year's record count. MassWildlife waterfowl biologist H. W. Heusmann reports in a recent issue of Massachusetts Wildlife (No. 4, 2000) that, based on annual Massachusetts CBC data, Hooded Merganser numbers have grown by more than 200 percent since 1978. This growth, no doubt part of a larger increase throughout the Northeast, was attributed to the use of more artificial nest boxes (185 boxes utilized in Massachusetts in 1998), primarily in the north central and western part of the state, the maturing of forests resulting in more natural cavities, and the increase in the beaver population which has created many new high-quality wetlands. Ruddy Ducks were common and widespread for the second consecutive year. Seasonal high counts of Ruddies from favored sites more than doubled during the mid-1990s, and numbers have remained strong since.

Late Ospreys in December were noted at Falmouth on the 2nd and at Lynnfield on the 16th. Late fall migrant raptors in the interior included 52 Red-tails plus 9 Red-shoulders at Mt. Wachusett November 12, while three weeks later in December 28 Red-tails and 4 Red-shoulders were still on the move there on the 2nd. These late raptor movements, however, were somewhat below those observed over the last couple of years. Following two reports from the North Shore in late October, it became clear that Rough-legged Hawks were on the move across a broader front as individuals began to filter in throughout the state during November and December. One of the highlights of the period was the appearance of a Gyrfalcon at the Plum Island salt marshes. The relatively sedentary behavior of this individual, which was often found in the same patch of marsh during its nearly three-week stay, was unusual for this normally far-ranging falcon. A sub-adult with a blue-gray cere, this spectacular bird was variously described as a "gray morph" and as a "dark morph," although it seem likely that only one individual was involved. The subtleties of plumage details and color tones vary widely according to distance and light and may have been responsible for the anomalous reports. The distinction between the darker Gyrfalcon color morphs may not be especially valid anyway, since many birds, perhaps including this one, are apparent intermediates. Four Golden Eagles were reported including one noted along the coast at Marshfield November 20.

Yet another Yellow Rail was flushed from the renowned Quaise, Nantucket marsh November 28, this being the same site where up to three were present last January. American Coot numbers were very low statewide. It was said to be perhaps the poorest flight ever in western Massachusetts, and the mere 44 counted on the Cape Cod waterfowl survey was the lowest since 1993 and 71 percent below the 18 year average. The only sizeable flock was at Spy Pond in Arlington, where a maximum of 150 were present December 10.

Impressive numbers and variety of shorebirds were still present in the Chatham area in late November. A count of 900 Black-bellied Plovers at South Beach November 25 may be one of the highest November tallies ever recorded. The plovers were accompanied on that late date by more than 200 Red Knots, over 1200 Sanderlings, 2 Western Sandpipers, 1 Least Sandpiper, 3 or more White-rumped Sandpipers, and 2000 Dunlin. In contrast, American Golden-Plovers departed early, with only a single report, from Great Meadows, in mid-November (compare November totals for the last four years, 1996-99: 8, 9, 36, 23; Bird Observer records). A very late, although certainly not unprecedented (more than 10 previous December records)

Semipalmated Plover was seen and heard at Winthrop December 23. All such individuals should be critically scrutinized for potential vagrant Ringed Plovers, Charadrius hiaticula, for which there is a single state record. A flock of three juvenile Lesser Yellowlegs were surprising lingerers at Newburyport December 5, but one still present, and first seen swimming with Mallards amidst ice flows in the harbor December 25-26, was shocking. Two "Western" Willets and a Marbled Godwit remained at Chatham until at least December 17, five of the latter being present there earlier during November. Hudsonian Godwits were absent in November. Traditionally a few will linger into the month at Newburyport where the species has declined as a fall migrant in recent years. Eleven Red Phalaropes were noted during a seawatch at Andrew's Point, Rockport November 30.

Good numbers of jaegers remained in the waters around both Cape Cod and Cape Ann into early December for the second consecutive year. These late jaegers are overwhelmingly Pomarine, although many were conservatively reported as jaeger species at Cape Cod. Forty-four Pomarines were counted passing Andrew's Point during a rather low intensity storm November 27, while a total of six additional Pomarines was seen on three seawatches there between December 12-17. A single Parasitic Jaeger, considered scarce locally beyond early November, was reported from Nantucket December 2. Four Little Gulls at Katama, Martha's Vineyard were notable for that location. More than 25 Lesser Black-backed Gulls were at South Monomoy November 4, while at least 17 others were found elsewhere, although none were located along the coast north of Cape Cod. Three were found together inland along the Connecticut River at Hadley November 19. A bird labeled a probable Herring x Lesser Black-backed Gull hybrid was reported, but not described, from Katama, Martha's Vineyard November 17. Only very modest numbers of Black-legged Kittiwakes were observed due to a lack of storms. Clearly, terns pulled out early with only four single Commons reported. It was the first time in at least the last ten years that Forster's Tern went unrecorded in the state during November. The average total for November Forster's since 1990 has been about 22 birds.

Dovekies staged a minor incursion into coastal waters beginning in mid-November that continued throughout December with a high count of 110 from First Encounter Beach in Eastham on November 12. Four separate Common Murres were identified, and it appeared that another good winter for Thick-billed Murres was shaping up by the end of December. Comparatively uncommon in Massachusetts waters, Thick-billed Murres, even during good flight years, typically arrive much later than Razorbills, the vanguard of which usually appear in late October. Only moderate numbers of Razorbills occurred, prior to the CBC period anyway, at least by recent standards. A total of seven Atlantic Puffins included a count of four at Race Point in Provincetown November 12.

OWLS THROUGH GROSBEAKS

A Barn Owl flushed from the dunes along South Beach in Chatham this November was unexpected: this species is rare outside of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket. On the islands these birds have been successful using manmade nesting boxes. Indications were good for a decent flight of Snowy Owls with up to 14 birds noted during the period, including one bird in Pittsfield, the seventh Berkshire County record since 1972 and the first in the county since 1992. Interesting were the reports of two dead Northern Saw-whet Owls, both picked up on the same day on Cape Cod. A total of 60 Saw-whet Owls was tabulated on the Christmas Bird Count.

The Rufous Hummingbird that returned to the Agawam feeder on October 5 continued until late November when it was captured and brought to the same greenhouse in Northampton where it has spent the last five years as a winter resident! A second selasphorus hummingbird, first found on October 7, continued at a Worcester feeder through November 19. For the third year in a row sapsuckers continue to be more in evidence during the early winter months than in the not-too-distant past when they were considered rare after October.

The highlight of the season, make that the year, was the discovery of a Tropical Kingbird at World's End in Hingham on November 8 where it remained until November 30. This represents the first state report of this species, and has already been accepted by the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee. The original observers of this bird must be commended for their careful observations, realizing that this was not a typical Western Kingbird. All indications are that this was a hatch-year bird, presumably of northern hemisphere origin (a bird of South America would be at least nine months old and its plumage quite worn). Several photographs, videos, and sound recordings were obtained during its nearly month-long stay. The differences between Tropical and Couch's kingbirds are so subtle and overlapping, especially for a juvenile bird, that it was essential that good voice recordings were obtained. Interesting was a report of another Tropical Kingbird on November 10 at Kiptopeke State Park on the Delmarva Peninsula. There were five reports of Western Kingbirds compared with just one reported last year during the same period. A Great-crested Flycatcher reported on November 18 was nearly six weeks beyond the normal departure date for that species.

It was another poor fall for Red-breasted Nuthatch, the fourth year in a row. Northern Shrikes were noted in many locations, although not as many as during a good flight year. In western Massachusetts it was the poorest fall ever for Brown Creepers, while Carolina Wrens continued to expand their range throughout the state, especially out west with 26 noted on the Springfield CBC. Eastern Bluebird numbers were very encouraging with good size flocks noted from many locations. The Mountain Bluebird first found on October 27 remained until November 2 at the Concord sewer beds. This was just the fifth occurrence of this species in Massachusetts.

The weather was unusually cold during the period, unlike last year's record warmth; nevertheless several species lingered past their normal departure dates: a Warbling Vireo in South Boston, a Northern Parula in Vineyard Haven, a Magnolia Warbler in Boston, an American Redstart in Melrose and a Bobolink in Sudbury. Among the more unusual reports were Western Tanagers from Gloucester and East Falmouth, a Henslow's Sparrow from Dorchester, and a Sedge Wren from Nantucket. The winter finch flight was sparse with only one significant Pine Siskin flock, only one report of Red Crossbill, and one flock of Common Redpolls.

Corrigendum

In the summary to the September/October sightings, the following was misleading: Rick Heil commented that this race is a regular migrant to our area and may comprise up to 10% of migrant White-crowns.

It should have read: Rick Heil commented that he is beginning to think that this race is a regular migrant to our area and may comprise from one to perhaps ten percent of migrant White-crowns.

HOW TO CONTRIBUTE BIRD SIGHTINGS TO BIRD OBSERVER

Bird Observer prints compilations of birds reported in Massachusetts and offshore waters. Our compilers select and summarize for publication reports that provide a snapshot of bird life during the reporting period.

Sightings for any given month must be reported in writing by the eighth of the following month, and may be submitted by postal mail or e-mail. Send written reports to Bird Sightings, Robert H. Stymeist, 94 Grove Street, Watertown, MA 02172. Include name and phone number of observer, common name of species, date of sighting, location, number of birds, other observer(s), and information on age, sex, and morph (where relevant). For instructions on e-mail submission, visit: <<http://massbird.org/birdobserver/submitrec.html>>.

Species on the Review List of the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee (indicated by an asterisk (*) in the Bird Reports), as well as species unusual as to place, time, or known nesting status in Massachusetts should be reported promptly to the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee, c/o Marjorie Rines, Massachusetts Audubon Society, South Great Road, Lincoln, MA 01773, or by email to <mrines@mediaone.net>.

*Indicates a species on the review list of the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee (MARC). Comment in parentheses (details submitted or no details) indicates whether written details have been submitted to the MARC, regardless of whether photographs or other documentation are available elsewhere. Because these sightings are generally published before the MARC votes, they normally have not been acted upon by the MARC.
