

THE BIRD OBSERVER SUMMARY FOR FEBRUARY 1975

On February 2, Pennsylvania's famed ground hog saw his shadow and predicted more winter weather. Here in New England it seemed he was dead wrong, since temperatures were 6 to 12 degrees above normal. The weather changed - a coastal storm on February 6 left 6-12 inches of snow in southern Massachusetts, followed by the coldest week of winter. Another storm on February 12 dumped an additional 4 to 8 inches of new snow. Temperatures returned to near normal with a high reading of 49 degrees at Boston on February 19. Fair weather predominated through February 22, when 1.50 inches of rain fell over southern New England. Temperatures continued above normal through the end of the month.

The Cardinal-Titmouse-Mockingbird survey was hampered by the storm of February 6, and higher-than-normal wind conditions made observations difficult this year; results will be forthcoming in a later issue of Bird Observer.

The birding was not much different from January, with the exception of the blackbird arrival on February 23. There has been little effect on the numbers of blackbirds reported, since the destruction of nearly a million birds by civilian and military officials in Tennessee and Kentucky in mid-month. In their efforts to kill off the birds, officials, with the blessing of the National Audubon Society, used a detergent which when sprayed on the roost, matted the feathers, depriving them of body heat, and the blackbirds froze to death. Bird Observer would be interested in knowing if there has been a decline of breeding blackbirds in your area.

The old stand-bys were still around during February: the White Pelican until mid-month when it was reported flying over Otis Air Force Base and not seen since at the West Harwich Conservation Lands. The Little Blue Heron and Snowy Egret continued at Fort Hill, Eastham, as did the King Rail. The Sandhill Crane maintained his stance at Herring Pond, Eastham throughout the month. Other lingerers included Red-bellied Woodpecker, Northern Three-toed Woodpecker at Harvard, despite the cutting down of his favorite elms, the Varied Thrush, Western Tanager and the Black-headed Grosbeak.

A Black Brant was found at Morris Island, Chatham on February 16 and remained in the area with 40-50 Brant through the end of the month. A Tufted Duck was observed at Salisbury on February 17 and continued throughout the month. As many as 1900 Canvasback, 1140 Greater Scaup and 140 Common Mergansers were reported on the Taunton River; this careful count was made between the Towns of Dighton and Fall River. Other impressive waterfowl counts were 900 Brant, 2000+ Common Goldeneye and 7000+ Common Eider in Boston Harbor.

Raptors included 4 Goshawks, 2 Cooper's, 5 Red-shouldered, an immature Bald Eagle at Lakeville, a Peregrine, 3 Merlins, and the Gyrfalcon continued at Monomoy. A partially oiled Common Murre was present in Wellfleet Harbor, and a Common Puffin was picked up alive in Truro and brought to the Wellfleet Bay Audubon Sanctuary where it later died. Note also the high and careful count of Black Guillemots on Cape Ann.

Many owls were reported during the month, with the Barn Owls continuing in Boston Harbor, and Long-eared Owls reported from five localities, including one pair nesting at Mount Auburn Cemetery, Cambridge.

An Eastern Phoebe was found at Orleans, and Carolina Wrens continued in Middlesex County. An Ovenbird was well-observed throughout the month at a feeder in Sherborn, and a lone Pine Grosbeak was seen at Harvard on February 4. Redwings and Song Sparrows started singing everywhere at months end - a prelude to the beautiful season of spring.
