

BIRD SIGHTINGS

March/April 2002

Richard S. Heil, Seth Kellogg, Marjorie W. Rines, Robert H. Stymeist

March came in like a lamb and the weather continued pleasant through midmonth, but a lion closed the month cold and wet. While the temperature was near normal and precipitation and sunshine close to normal overall, in Boston the temperature averaged 40.2 degrees, 1.3 degrees above normal, making this the eighth above-normal month in a row. The high reached 66 degrees on March 9 with a low of 19 degrees on March 22. Rainfall was recorded at 3.52 inches in Boston with measurable amounts noted on thirteen days. Snowfall was just 1.4 inches, 6.8 inches less than the average for March. The ground was bare all month except for those few days when snow fell. The seasonal total for Boston was 14.8 inches, 25.8 inches below average. Winds were from a southerly direction on eleven days.

April was warm and sunny and unusually dry, despite frequent rain. The temperature averaged 49.8 degrees, 1.5 degrees above normal. A high of 93 degrees on April 17 was 24 degrees above normal for the date and an all-time record high for so early in the year. That afternoon a cold front came in and the temperature plummeted 32 degrees in just one hour. This day was preceded by nine days of above normal temperatures which contributed to advancing the foliage of the trees by nearly three weeks. No birder appreciates this warm weather so early in the season! Rainfall was 2.64 inches, just about an inch under the average, and measurable amounts were noted on twelve days. There was only a trace of snowfall in Boston, but measurable amounts fell in many inland suburbs on April 5 and again on April 23. Thunder was heard on four days in the Boston area, double the average for April, and heavy fog was recorded on three days. Winds were out of the southwest on April 8, 9, 12, 13, 16, 19, and on April 30, with southerly winds noted on April 1, 4, and 24.

LOONS THROUGH ALCIDS

Reports of individual Pacific Loons continued to emanate from both the Andrew's Point, Rockport and Race Point, Provincetown areas, both during March. Regular and expected in small numbers in the interior in spring, inland grebes included fourteen Horned and five Red-necked on the Connecticut River at Turners Falls April 15. No large staging flocks of Red-necked Grebes developed along the coast this spring, with the largest assemblages consisting of a meager fifty-seven at Nahant and forty-three at Winthrop. The Gloucester Eared Grebe was last reported April 14. Possibly the same bird present along the New Hampshire coast earlier in the winter, a Western Grebe loitered off the beach at Plum Island from March 16 into May. The only tubenoses reported were forty Northern Fulmars that were wind-driven past Andrew's Point in Rockport during a modest storm March 15.

The recent increase in the beaver population and the ensuing creation of new wetlands, often containing large stands of dead, waterlogged white pines, has been beneficial to Great Blue Herons who utilize these sites for rookeries and for foraging. One such site in West Boxford contained nearly fifty herons on nests by March 27. The advance front of arriving "southern" herons began early, with the first Snowy Egret at Salem March 14, a Great Egret at Squantum March 16, and a Little Blue Heron at Salisbury March 28. How long before the vanguard begins to arrive in February? Several weeks later, herons counted flying to the Kettle Island, Manchester rookery at dusk the evening of April 13 included 59 Great Egrets, 152

Snowy Egrets, 25 Little Blue Herons, and 31 Glossy Ibis. The sole Tricolored Heron of the period was in Essex April 29. A Cattle Egret that lingered in Amesbury for a week in late April was a surprise, while the one or two pairs of Salem Harbor nesters were seen a couple of times in the Beverly Farms area, as is usual. Three flocks of Glossy Ibis migrating north along Plum Island totaled 109, April 16-17. A kettle of fifty Turkey Vultures was observed along Route 1 in Lynnfield, just before an unseasonable strong thunderstorm April 3.

Up to four Greater White-fronted Geese were reported, but no details that might help determine subspecies, and thereby origin, were submitted. The precise status of the Taiga (gambelli) and Greenland (flavirostris) races in New England is still to be determined, although Greenland birds are thought to predominate. Again, like last year, a "Dark-bellied Brant" (Branta bernicla bernicla) appeared at Newburyport. This spring one was closely studied among the Pale-bellied Brant April 25-26. Peak counts of some dabbling ducks, particularly American Black Duck and Green-winged Teal, appeared somewhat subdued this spring as a mild February apparently resulted in an early movement and a more protracted migration in general. The two drake "Eurasian Teal", singles at Scituate and Plum Island, continued from the winter. A flock of seven Redheads at Cherry Hill Reservoir in West Newbury was a surprise March 14, representing a recent if not all-time high for Essex County. The Worcester area Tufted Duck visited Shrewsbury in mid-March before departing for regions unknown, while a female Tufted was found in Acoaxet March 17, where perhaps the same individual has made several appearances in recent years. A new record count for Harlequin Duck was established with a tally of 116 at Rockport March 6, as the wintering population in the state continues to expand. Excellent counts of Bufflehead were made on Cape Cod during the peak of migration in mid-April, including 1621 in Harwich and 520 in Orleans. A total of only seven Barrow's Goldeneye for the period, although a near-average number for recent years, is only about one-half to one-third of March/April totals from back in the 1970s and 1980s, indicative of this duck's decline in the state since that time. Perhaps this may be accounted for by the prevailing milder winters, which allow more individuals to remain farther north, rather than representing a true population decline in the Northeast. (Note that 331 Barrow's were recorded on a New Brunswick CBC last winter, a regional record and further evidence of a possible northward winter range shift.)

At least five Broad-winged Hawks were observed during the last week of March, an unprecedented early arrival. In fact, there are only two prior March records in the past fifteen seasons, both of single birds. The largest flight of Broad-winged Hawks detected occurred on April 24 when 478 passed over Barre Falls. Only three Rough-legged Hawks were reported, the lowest for the period in at least ten years. One of the events of the season, a male Eurasian Kestrel was found in Chatham on April 18, along the causeway connecting Morris Island to the mainland. It was originally reported from South Wellfleet on April 14, but word did not reach the birding community until it was rediscovered. Delighting hundreds of journeying birders, the kestrel remained in the vicinity throughout the month, although it became more sporadic in its appearance toward the end of its stay. There are several prior regional records between New Jersey and New Brunswick, including one from Massachusetts, an old record, of a female collected at Nantasket Beach in Hull on September 29, 1887. The prevalence of cold fronts and resultant west and northwest winds, along with expanded coverage, resulted in record counts of migrating American Kestrels along the coast on the Plum Island hawkwatch this spring. A total of 1501 were counted there for the spring season (through May), with 1100 passing by just during April. Some peak single-day counts of raptors during April at the Plum Island vigil, where birds often wing past observers nearly at eye level, included 22 Ospreys and 74 Sharp-shinned Hawks April 27, and 29 Northern Harriers and 298 American Kestrels April 4.

Single Clapper Rails arrived in the salt marshes at Eastham and Plum Island by April 20 and 25, respectively. A rare Common Moorhen was found at Amherst April 26. Two Sandhill Cranes were found. One lingered around Nantucket and Muskeget Islands April 8-27, and another was noted over Reading April 27.

Following just three days after the appearance of the Eurasian Kestrel in Chatham, a Pacific Golden-Plover (Pluvialis fulva) was discovered in the salt marsh at Plum Island (just a couple of hundred yards from the famous "salt pans") on the Parker River NWR in Newbury on April 21. It was the first Massachusetts record and only the third for eastern North America. An adult male in alternate plumage, the plover cooperatively foraged and roosted in the vicinity of several small pans about 100 yards from the refuge road for two weeks. Careful and critical observations for the duration of the bird's stay consistently revealed the salient features separating this species, only recently split in 1993, from its very similar congeners, the American (dominica) and European (aprictaria) Golden-Plovers. Some of these field marks include the bright golden, coarsely patterned upperparts; the white stripe along the neck and chest extending along the flanks and under the tail; the long bill and the very long, "knitting-needle" legs; the rather short primary extension/long tertials, with only two primaries apparent beyond the longest tertial; and the grayish underwings, apparent on several occasions when the bird was viewed preening or in flight. This striking bird was enjoyed by hundreds of observers and well photographed. Prior documented records of fulva in the East include an adult in prebasic molt just this past September in New Jersey, and an adult female shot at Scarborough, Maine, September 11, 1911.

It is interesting to note the timing of the prealternate molt among the three species of golden-plovers. The American Golden-Plover begins this molt, on average, up to a month later than the other two species (initiating migration north in the spring while still in basic plumage, whereas Pacifics and Europeans begin their prealternate molt earlier, on the wintering grounds), such that any golden-plover in North America in or near alternate ("breeding") plumage during April is unlikely to be dominica. Certainly, all spring golden-plovers in the Northeast warrant detailed scrutiny.

Four Lesser Yellowlegs from the wintering flock continued at Newburyport into March. An extremely early Willet, very likely of the western race inornatus, given the date, was found at the Plum Island salt pans March 9. The first eastern Willets, the local breeding form, began to filter in to local salt marshes pretty much on schedule during the latter half of April. Other early shorebird arrivals of note included a Semipalmented Plover in South Dartmouth April 9 and a Least Sandpiper in Essex April 3. In spring, Pectoral Sandpipers are reliably irregular in Massachusetts, sometimes engaging in pronounced eastward incursions, sometimes not. Despite the occurrence of numerous cold fronts and plentiful northwest winds, few Pectoral Sandpipers were deflected to the coast this spring from their normal interior continental migration route. Only five individuals were found in the state during April, a very low number. Only a single Ruff appeared, at the usual Joppa Flats, Newburyport location April 24-28, surely still among the most reliable sites for this species on the continent. Common Snipe made the weakest showing in at least six springs, with the few "high counts" only in the 40-50 range.

The maximum count of Bonaparte Gulls was of a paltry 320 at Nahant April 20, while a flock of seven was a good find inland at Turners Falls April 14. For the second spring, very few bonies appeared at Newburyport. Unlike the previous two Aprils, no Little Gulls were detected in the state. The 35+ Lesser Black-backed Gulls reported included a high proportion of adults. Where and whence will the long overdue first North American breeding record be revealed, the Arctic, Atlantic Canada, or . . . Monomoy? The first-winter "Nelson's Gull", the nom de guerre for a Glaucous X Herring hybrid, continued at Plymouth to March 26. Two Caspian Terns migrating north over the Boxford forests were snagged by a diligent observer April 6. A Common Tern identified at Turners Falls was early April 15, and always rare and unexpected inland. The resident pair of Forster's Terns returned to their lonely Newburyport-Plum Island outpost, the northernmost known breeding site on the East Coast, by April 24. Following a rather poor winter for alcids (or at least for alcid watchers), Razorbills in particular were virtually nonexistent in March and April. Common Murres were the exception: four were still present at Race Point, Provincetown March 2, following the remarkable count of twenty-one there in late February.

PARAKEETS THROUGH GROSBEAKS

Ah spring! The weather can certainly be a big factor for the success of spring migration; the wrong winds can just frustrate the birding world that anxiously awaits the returning songbirds. This March through April was a birder's dream and hope with lots of southerly winds. March saw winds from the south on eleven days, and in April the winds came from the southwest seven days, those considered the most favorable for migration in the spring. Last year winds out of the southwest were recorded on just one day in March and just one day in April. There were several days in which observers noted an increase in migrants coinciding with the weather. The last five days of March had temperatures above normal with strong southerly winds on March 29-31. Good numbers of Eastern Phoebes, Tree Swallows, Eastern Meadowlarks, and northbound Fox Sparrows were widely reported throughout our area. An Eastern Kingbird was recorded on March 29 in Raynham, a day of a strong south wind that brought the temperature up in the sixties. This represents the earliest arrival date for this species, surpassing a March 30, 1994, bird from Fort Hill in Eastham. On Plum Island, Rick Heil witnessed one of his best ever early spring fallouts on April 16. A front had stalled over our area the previous 36 hours with an easterly wind. This was followed by a surge of warm air from the southwest which saw temperatures rise as much as 11 degrees above normal on April 16 and an amazing 24 degrees on April 17. Reaching the coast overnight, the migrants encountered dense fog and an easterly breeze that resulted in a major spring fallout for several species. Rick recorded 54 Northern Flickers, 11 Eastern Phoebes, 2 Blue-headed Vireos, 60 Tree Swallows, 26 Golden- and 110 Ruby-crowned kinglets, 42 Hermit Thrushes, 120 American Robins, 60 Yellow-rumped, 9 Pine and 130 Palm (hypochrysea or "yellow") warblers, 3 Chipping, 41 Savannah, 2 Seaside and 145 Song sparrows, and 165 American Goldfinches. In addition, Rick noted 4 "western" Palm Warblers; this nominate race (palmarum) is a common fall migrant and occasional winterer in southeastern Massachusetts, but a rare spring migrant in our area. The mild and almost snowless winter was certainly a contributing factor.

The mild weather produced a new early arrival date for several species in western Massachusetts. Seth Kellogg reports the earliest ever arrival dates for Wood Thrush, Gray Catbird, Northern Waterthrush (this bird found in Pittsfield on April 3 was ten days earlier than the previous record of April 13, 1991) and Common Yellowthroat. Seth also reports a tie for the earliest arrival for Warbling Vireo and Rose-breasted Grosbeak (April 25). In eastern Massachusetts some of the early migrants included a Yellow-billed Cuckoo that was banded at Manomet on April 26, a Whip-poor-will calling in Shrewsbury on April 13, and an Orchard Oriole found in Medford on April 27.

Monk Parakeets, now accepted by the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee, were noted from Somerset and in Dartmouth. Red-bellied Woodpeckers and Carolina Wrens, on the other hand, continue to expand their ranges; of note are the nineteen Carolina Wrens in Northbridge in the summary that follows. The invasion of this species has been rapid and unprecedented. Mark Lynch, one of the icons of Worcester County birders, notes that this species was essentially nonexistent in Worcester County until the mid-1990s, but now they are found in increasing numbers. Northbridge, according to Mark "is very much riparian habitat and there are tons of Carolina Wrens there now." Another species increasing into our area from the north and west is the Common Raven. Notice the reports from Boxford, the Blue Hills, and from South Beach in Chatham.

At Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary in Marshfield a single Long-eared Owl continued along the Secret Trail through the end of April; during early March as many as six individuals were present there. Snowy Owls continued through the end of April at Logan Airport and another late Snowy was found on Sandy Neck in Barnstable on April 28. There were many reports of nesting and young Great Horned Owls throughout our area.

Seventeen species of warblers and four species of vireos were noted during the period, compared with a record number of twenty-two species of warblers and all five vireo species last year during the same period. Fallouts of warblers were noted (in addition to the previously mentioned major fallout at Plum Island) from Nahant, Marblehead Neck, and at Mount Auburn, although not at the same magnitude as Plum Island. Five species of warblers were found at Franklin Park on April 30. Nine Orange-crowned Warblers were reported, most of them in March, most likely survivors of the mild winter. A Wilson's Warbler found singing at Fresh Pond in Cambridge on April 10 was most probably another survivor of the winter rather than a neotropical migrant. A Prothonotary Warbler found at Ipswich River Wildlife Sanctuary in Topsfield brightened the early spring landscape as well as the spirits of many birders.

Among the more unusual species reported during this period were Red-headed Woodpeckers (three reports, all holdovers from last year), Boreal Chickadees from Granby and Windsor, a Summer Tanager in Belmont, a Harris's Sparrow in Westport, a Painted Bunting in Lexington, and Yellow-headed Blackbirds in Northampton and Weymouth.

Flocks of both White-winged and Red crossbills continued in the Salisbury State Park camping area and Common Redpolls were noted in larger numbers, especially in the last few days of March, coinciding with the strong southerly winds sending those birds back north.

Species on the Review List of the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee (indicated by an asterisk [*] in the Bird Reports), as well as species unusual as to place, time, or known nesting status in Massachusetts, should be reported promptly to the Massachusetts Avian Records Committee, c/o Marjorie Rines, Massachusetts Audubon Society, South Great Road, Lincoln, MA 01773, or by e-mail to <marj@mrines.com>.

HOW TO CONTRIBUTE BIRD SIGHTINGS TO BIRD OBSERVER

Bird Observer prints compilations of birds reported in Massachusetts and offshore waters. Our compilers select and summarize for publication reports that provide a snapshot of bird life during the reporting period.

Sightings for any given month must be reported in writing by the eighth of the following month, and may be submitted by postal mail or e-mail. Send written reports to Bird Sightings, Robert H. Stymeist, 94 Grove Street, Watertown, MA 02172. Include name and phone number of observer, common name of species, date of sighting, location, number of birds, other observer(s), and information on age, sex, and morph (where relevant). For instructions on e-mail submission, visit: <<http://massbird.org/birdobserver/sightings/>>.

Get involved!

Bird Observer is created entirely by volunteers: people who want to give something back to the birding community. We have several opportunities available for you to join us. If you have extra time available, however limited, and would enjoy the chance to meet a new group of people, there may well be a position for you.

Managing Editor. Are you good at managing details, deadlines, and follow-up? You could be just the person we are looking for. Our editorial staff is responsible for bringing in and editing articles, but the Managing Editor pulls the pieces together and makes them into an issue of Bird Observer. It is definitely time consuming and requires excellent organizational skills. Preference will be given to someone with editorial experience, but it is not a necessity.

Mailing Manager. If you want to get involved but have limited time, this could be the job for you. The Mailing Manager works with the Production Editor, Circulation Manager, printer, and post office to see that each issue gets in the mail. Total time is roughly six hours every other month, and involves lifting heavy boxes of the printed journal. The printer, post office, and potential volunteers to help with the mailing are located in the Cambridge/Belmont area, so proximity is a plus.

Promotion Manager. We would like to see Bird Observer receive more attention from potential subscribers, sponsors, and advertisers. This is a new position, and we are looking for someone with imagination and creativity. Experience in promotion or advertising would be useful.

If you want to find out more, call or e-mail Marj Rines at 781-643-6128, marj@mrines.com.
