

A TAXONOMIC GUIDE TO FEATURE ARTICLES AND SPECIES ACCOUNTS

We like to feel that one of the major benefits of subscribing to Bird Observer is that you accumulate a handy collection of species accounts, field identification articles, and vagrants reports with specific reference to eastern Massachusetts, a collection to which you can refer time and again. To aid readers who regularly refer to back issues in this regard, and to acquaint new subscribers with the contents of previous volumes, we have prepared the following taxonomic index of feature articles and special commentary in Volumes 1-5 inclusive. If you are missing back copies of Bird Observer, individual issues may be obtained for $1.25, and complete volumes for only $6.50.

ENDANGERED SPECIES RECEIVE CRITICAL HABITAT DESIGNATION

The Interior Department's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has rules that the living space of the endangered American Peregrine Falcon, the Florida Snail (Everglade) Kite, the Dusky Seaside Sparrow, and the Cape Sable Sparrow is critical to their survival. This ruling requires all Federal agencies to ensure that any actions authorized, funded, or implemented by them do not result in the destruction or adverse modification of the designated critical habitats of these species. The critical habitat designation does not stop any specific project; it merely identifies the living space thought essential for the species' continued existence, enabling Federal agencies to know where the habitat is located so they can plan accordingly.'
