Jones's typescript was saved from oblivion by E. & S. Wood, who purchased them at an auction several years ago and subsequently donated them to the Ohio Ornithological Society, whence they will join the Jones archives at Oberlin University. Everyone interested in the history of Ohio ornithology owes them a debt. We are also very grateful to Gina Buckey, who lives on the north shore of Buckeye Lake, for research into the history of the site, including work on the map. Vicki White of the Buckeye Lake Museum was very helpful with references, as was Donna Fisher Braig.

A young glaucous gull from 4 Feb in Cleveland, photographed by Gary Meszaros. This second-winter bird retains the bicolored bill of the first-winter, but looks overall chalky-white, lacking extensive brownish vermiculations.

Adult glaucous gull, photographed in Cleveland 1 Feb by Gary Meszaros. Compare the head and bill structure to the Iceland gull.

An adult Iceland gull in perfect plumage, photographed in Cleveland 1 Feb by Gary Meszaros. This is our local "Kumlien's" form, which does not always show such dark and prominent black in the primaries
