

Regional Reports Pictorial Highlights— Fall 1986

Field observers were out en masse during fall migration 1986; many of them with cameras. The selection of photographs submitted with regional reports was myriad and of fine quality. Here we have some of the best illustrating the most notable records. Upwards of fifty more are to be found in the body of regional reports. We hope that this feature prompts more birders to take their cameras afield.—S.R.D.

Right: Red-billed Tropicbird at Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts, September 15, 1986. Photo/Jonathan Alderfer.

Left and far left: Lewis' Woodpecker at Cow Head Peninsula, Gros Morne National Park, Newfoundland, August 15, 1986. Photos/Blake Maybank. Above: White-tailed Tropicbird at Hydrographer Canyon, southeast of Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, September 1986. Photo/Richard Bowen.

Yellow-throated Warbler at Grand Forks, North Dakota, August 10, 1986. First record for the state. Photo/Greg Lambeth.

This bird near St. Marks Light on September 26, 1986, was identified (by voice) as a Couch's Kingbird, perhaps the second for Florida. Photo/James Cavanaugh.

Clark's Grebe at Victoria, Vancouver Island, British Columbia, October 13, 1986. First confirmed record for British Columbia. Photo/Tim Zurowski.

Above: Sulphur-bellied Flycatcher at Presqu'île Provincial Park, Ontario, September 28, 1986. First record for Canada. Photo/Tony Beck. Below: This light-morph Wedge-tailed Shearwater following a boat five miles west of Point Pinos, California, on August 31, 1986, established the first record north of Mexico. Photo/Rich Stallcup.

Below: Juvenile Eurasian Dotterel at Point Reyes, California, September 7, 1986. Above: The bird went into a defensive crouch when two Turkey Vultures flew over. Photos/Peter LaTourette.

