

bank, with the sod at the top overhanging it a few inches above. It was not roofed over, and contained the exceptional number of six eggs of the usual color and size; incubation well advanced. The nest was made of dry rootlets, grass, and leaves, with finer rootlets and grasses for the lining.

When we were within four or five feet of the nest, the bird left it, and joining its mate, flew nervously about at a distance, uttering quick, sharp notes of alarm.
